Understanding and Managing Differences in Teams is an insightful and highly interactive workshop designed to enhance team performance by helping team members understand and manage personality and conflict style differences. Using the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI®) personality profile and the Thomas-Kilmann Conflict Mode Instrument® (TKI®), team members learn to recognize and leverage strengths in their natural preferences, tendencies and characteristics, manage tensions and work more productively with people of different personality types and conflict styles, and identify and manage potential blind spots that can hinder performance.

Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI®)

Using the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator® (MBTI®) personality profile, the most widely used personality instrument in the world, team members develop greater self-understanding and increase their understanding and appreciation of others. They learn:

- a structured, systematic way of recognizing individual differences – one's own and those of other people;
- the characteristics unique to each personality type and gain insight on how these influence communication and interaction with others; and
- tips and techniques to manage the natural tension that occurs between people of differing types and to work more constructively and productively with people who are different.

Thomas-Kilmann Conflict Mode Instrument® (TKI®)

Using the Thomas-Kilmann Conflict Mode Instrument® (TKI®), the best-selling instrument for understanding how people resolve conflict, team members discover their natural conflict-handling style and understand how others approach conflict. They learn:

- the different ways that people respond to conflict;
- their preferred mode of handling conflict;
- the most appropriate uses of each conflict-handling mode and how to increase their comfort level with their least-preferred mode; and
- how to choose the most effective behaviors for a particular conflict situation.
